Russia Gets Peking Bid On Nonaggression Pact

By Hedrick Smith

MOSCOW, Nov. 7 (NYT).-China, in a major shift in its public position, today informed the Soviet leadership of its interest in a nonaggression pact with Moscow, but linked the idea to separation of their military forces along their disputed fron-

Peking made known its interest m a message to the Kremlin on the 57th anniversary of the nevik Revolution, according to official Chinese sources in

The Chinese message was not printed in the Soviet press, but it was broadcast by Radio Peking, in Russian, to the Soviet Union, and made available in Russian, in an unofficial translation by China's Hsinhua news agency, to Western correspondents here.

Previously, Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev twice had charged the Chinese leadership with ignoring Soviet proposals for a nonaggression pact and retusing to respond when the Kremlin put forward a draft treaty on Jan. 15, 1971, and again in the middle of June, 1973. Chinese officials here have rediculed the proposals in the past as "Russian

Each side has attempted in the past to present itself as the reasonable party and present the other as opposing settlement of their disputes. Given conditions attached by Peking today to a nonaggression pact, its acceptance of the nonaggression pact idea was seen as a possible ploy to put Mocow on the diplomatic defensive.

Meeting in 1969

The Chinese message, as translated into Russian by Chinese sources, said the idea of a nonaggression pact was part of an understanding reached by Chinese Premier Chou En-lai and Soviet Premier Alexel Kosygin when they held a surprise meeting in Peking on Sept. 11, 1969.

Peking also maintained that this understanding included a provision to separate military forces of both sides along the border, something that Moscow has balked at doing.

In a passage that the Chinese sources underscored as being of unusual interest, and departing from the standard text of annual Revolution Day congratulatory messages, Peking said: "The Chinese government has frequently proposed that the two sides should hold talks to achieve relations of friendship and good neighborliness. Above all the mutual understanding achieved in September, 1969, at the meeting of the Premiers of the two statesthat an agreement should be signed on nonaggression, nonuse of force, maintenance of the status quo on the frontier, the prevention of military conflicts and clashes, the separation of forces in disputed regions and the solution of all frontier questions through talks-should be adher-

Five days ago, Premier Kosygin made what was regarded as a conciliatory speech dealing with China, ignoring border disputes and the Soviet concern over Chinese detention of a Soviet helicopter crew, captured in China's Sinkiang Province last March. Chinese officials here told Westerners last week that if there was to be any espionage trial of the Soviet helicopter crew, as Moscow once feared, it would not take place "for a long while." Chinese newsmen, often critical tions, lately have been circum-spect in comments on Sino-Soviet

Cites Greek-Cypriot 'Illusions'

Clerides Concedes Federation Is Key to Cyprus Settlement

NICOSIA, Nov. 7 (AP).-President Glafkos Clerides of Cyprus told Greek Cypriots last night that accepting federation with Turk-Cypriots was the only realistic way of settling the Cyprus crisis. "I see no prospect of the Turks accepting any settlement that does not include federation and some geographical basis for it," he told more than 300 persons gathered in a small art gallery. It was the first time the Greek-Cypriot leader had publicly counseled the acceptance of a federation.

Before the Turkish invasion of the island last July, such a state-ment would have been regarded by must Greek Cypriots as betrayal. Until then, the ethnic Greek majority dominated the Cyprus government and the is-

Mr. Clerides said Greek-Cypriot thinking on Cyprus before the Turkish invasion was based on "false assumptions, terrible mistakes and illusions.

The main illusion, he said, "was that we could treat the Turkish-Cypriot community as a simple count it was backed by Turkey with a population of 33 million." "In reality we are the minority,

Mr. Clerides noted that 40 per cent of Cyprus territory and 70 percent of the island's economic production are under Turkish occupation and that Greek Cypriots have become refugees. He said future negotiations must take into account how a mutually acceptable negotiated settlement can be reached, so that the Turkish troops can be withdrawn and the refugees returned to their homes. "I am sorry if I disappoint you," he said, "but we must not make the same mistakes as before, confuse what we want with what is Federation would involve separate regions, one administered by the ethnic Turks and one by the ethnic Greeks, but stopping short of partition. It would preserve the independence of Cyprus and give the central government well-defined powers.

Clash Over Resolution

Earlier yesterday, Mr. Clerides and Turkish minority leader Rauf Denktash clashed over the UN resolution passed Friday that called for respect for Cyprus's independence, the withdrawal of foreign troops and the return of refugees to their homes.

Speaking to newsmen before a new round of talks on humani-tarian problems caused by the July 20 Turkish invasion and subsequent occupation of the northern part of the island, the two community leaders offered divergent views.

Mr. Denktash said the Turkish Cypriots support only parts of the resolution. He singled out the paragraph calling for respect for the independence and sovereignty of Cyprus. He said the rest of the resolution was merely "the opinion of the assembly." At this point, Mr. Clerides intervened to say, "I accept the UN resolution in toto, even those parts which may not be in my favor." "I don't think one can afford the luxury or has the right to separate portions of the resolution and say This one I accept and that one I reject."

A communiqué issued after the meeting said the two sides exchanged information and considered procedures to aid in a search for more than 3,000 persons still listed as missing. The Cyprus government also announced it intended to take legal steps against German and British fruit importers buying Cypriot

Soviet SALT Pact Violation Feared in U.S. statement by Gen. George Brown,

By Warren L. Nelson

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7 (UPI).

-A little-noticed debate has been mounting here over whether Russia is violating the agreements reached in the 1972 Soviet-American Strategic Arms Limitations Talks. Rumors of Soviet violations have been circulating in Washington for a month. A report charged the Russians with building up to 200 new Intercontinental Ballistic Missile silos. which would put them more than 100 missiles above the ceiling of 1,618 agreed to in the 1972 pact. Last week, Sen. James Buckley, Cons.-R., N. said in a speech that there was mounting evidence that the Russians were trying to conceal some of their construction from American spy satellites. This also is a violation of the SALT pact he said. The Pentagon has backed away

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: "I can state categorically that we have no information that the Soviet Union is failing to abide by those agreements."

Some Indications

On Oct. 31, Pentagon spokesman William Beecher took the debate one step further, saying: There have been some indications that the Soviets are building some command and control facilities in their silo fields." That would not be a violation of the SALT agreements.

Yesterday, the Pentagon said that the silos could be used for ICBMs, for shorter-range missiles or for launch control equipment, Then it added, in a written statement. "In the early construction phases, it is sometimes difficult to determine the purpose to which a silo is to be put when com-

That had the effect of down-since the silos would not be a violation when under construction although they would be if ICBMs were installed in them later. Pentagon sources said that there is considerable debate within intelligence circles over the purposes of the latest Soviet construction. Some officials suspect that the new holes will house new ICBMs. Others think that the construction is innocent work

The sources said that the United States has taken the matter up with the Soviet Union privately and asked for an explanation. Even if the Russians are violating the agreements, it would not have the effect of giving them a sudden military hility to overwhelm the United States in a first strike, since U.S. military officials have frequently said that the Russians have no way of finding and de-

Suggestion For Rich Nations

Eating Less, Mainly Meat, Is Key Issue at Food Talks

less in rich countries to release food for the third of the world struggling for existence has begun to surface as a key issue at the World Food Conference, where poor and affluent nations are trying to work out arrangements that would prevent present and future generations from sterving,

An exchange at a strategy ses-sion between Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore, one of the score of congressional representatives on the U.S. delegation, and Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz, who heads the delegation. pointed up one aspect of the question.

Sen. Hatfield contended that reduced consumption, particularly of meat, could help meet the food shortages in south Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. Mr. Butz, how-ever, asserted that the grain component of meat cannot be transferred directly into food aid because the animal forage is not usable by humans. Even if such grain were edible, it could not beshipped immediately because somebody has to pay, Mr. Butz

Butz Disputed Some other food experts here take issue with Mr. Butz. For example, Lester Brown, senior fellow of the Overseas Development Council in Washington and a former Agriculture Department adviser, noted that grain sorghum has been used as a food in India since 1970 and is cheaper than

Up to eight pounds of grain are needed to produce one pound of meat. Mr. Brown estimates that a 5-per-cent reduction in meat consumption in the United States would free 6 million tons of grain, which is equivalent to 60 per cent of the present 10million-ton food gap in those parts of the world on the brink of starvation.

Non-governmental groups from Canada (church and voluntary charitable organizations) have taken an initiative at the conference by pressing for a final declaration that would state the in-tention of the affluent nations to trim their diets.

Experts Spot Flaw On Japan A-Ship

TOKYO, Nov. 7 (Reuters) -A committee of experts has concluded that a faulty steel shield caused a radioactive leak aboard Japan's first nuclear-powered ship, the Mutsu, the Science and Technology Agency announced yesterday.

The shield was not well enough designed to keep fast neutron rays from leaking from the nuclear reactor, but the reactor could be used with a modified shield, according to a committee report sent to the agency and the Transport Ministry yester-day, an agency spokesman said.

The leak was detected Sept. 1 when the Mutsu was undergoing its first sea trials with the reactor working far below capacity. The ship returned to its home port of Mutsu three weeks ago after the government assured local fishermen that a new home berth would be found for the ship within six mouths.

All told there will be 11 new faces in the Senate next year 12 if Democrat William Guy ultimately prevails over Sen. Milton Young in North Dakots. The changes include newcomers who won seats vacated by the retirement of members of their own party, plus newcomers who cap-tured seats previously held by the

A comparison of the newcomers with the men they replace indicates only a very marginal gain-for the liberals. Sen. Bill Brock, R-Tenn., said that on a strictly ideological basis there is only "some slight shift in philosophy, maybe a net of two" for the liberals. This is because the liberals. This is because some Democrats elected Tuesday are less liberal than the men they For example, Democrat John Glenn, the astronaut who won by a landslide in Ohio, is counted more conservative than Sen Howard Metzenbaum, from whom Mr. Glenn had earlier wrested the Democratic nomination in a primary battle.

Kentucky and Nevada By the same token, Kentucky's Democratic Gov. Wendell Ford is usually described as more conservative than Republican Sen. Marlow Cook, his defeated opponent, and Nevada's former Republican governor Paul Legalt is deemed more conservative than Sen. Alan Bible, the Democrat he In Iowa, the change from re-tiring Sen. Harold Hughes, a Democrat, to Rep. John Culver, also a Democrat, who is replacing him, is zero. Both are strong

In New Hampshire, the change is also zero between Republican Sen. Norris Cotton, who retired, and Republican Louis Wyman, who narrowly held the seat in a result that Democrats will contest.

Both are strong conservatives. On the other hand, Utah's new GOP Sen. E.J. for the seat being vacated by Senate GOP dean George Alken, a While that change is something of a liberal gain, the victory of moderate-to-liberal Democrat Gary Hart over incumbent conservative Republican Peter Dominick in Colorado is a major leftward shift. The same is true for the election of Florida Democrat Richard Stone (who will incidentally, become the third Jewish senator); Both Sen; Dominick and Mr. Stone's predecessor, Sen. Edward Gurney, a Republican, who did not run because of financial corruption charges, were usually counted as arch-conservatives.

Shifts in Committee Posts The retirement of some senators and the defeat of others will produce major Senate shifts in committee posts.

Sen. Pulbright's post as Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman is slated for Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala, who has always been closer to the defense establishment and has taken a stance less favorable to détente and less critical of the Vietnam war. Sen. William Prozmire, D-Wis., in turn, will take over the Banking Committee chairmanship now held by Sen. Sparkman. Sen. Proximire is considered far less friendly to the housing and banking industries. Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., a leading consumer-rights advocate and environmentalist, will place Sen Bible as head of the Select Small Business Committee, while liberal Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., who won land-slide re-election Tuesday, will replace Sen. Ervin as head of Government Operations.

News Analysis

By Lon Cannon

and fules Witcover WASHINGTON, Nov. 7 (WP). Th: midtern election landslide poses I'w challenges for the victorious Democratic party and may have given the losing Republicans a nudge to the left. On the day after one of their biggest victories since the New Deal era, Democrate were talking cantiously of the burdens of leadership imposed by their huge majorities in Congress.

"I'm convinced that the public is just giving us one more chance," said Sen. Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, the 1968 Democrati: presidential nominee. Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, the party's standard-bearer in 1972 and a winning candidate for re-election Tuesday, also warned of a backlash against the Democrats if the party 'ailed to produce. So did the party's national chairman, Robert Strauss, who said that congressional leaders would have to come up with a Democratic program if President Ford did not show leadership.

"What we did was assume a responsibility," he said. "The public listened to the commitents we made and believed us, and now we have to perform . . . we have a responsibility."

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont, made the same point after a 50-minute meeting with President Ford late yesterday. Congress, he told reporters, will work with the President "to the best of our abilities."

"This will not be a Congress which attempts to demean the President," he said. "What the people want is action, and it must done cooperatively."

Call for Action While Democratic leaders were interpreting their victory as a public call for action on such unemployment, reform and national health insurance. Republicans were talking hopefully of a comeback in

White House political adviser Dean Burch, who is likely to be leaving the Ford administration before the end of the year, compared the election to 1946 when Democrats lost 12 Senate seats and 55 House seats. President Harry Truman, who at that time was an unelected president as Mr. Ford is now, came back in 1948 to win a narrow victory. Other Republicans compared the election to 1964 when Sen. Barry Goldwater went down to a landslide defeat carrying congressmen with him. The GOP came back to make gains in 1966 and capture the presidency two years after that.

"In many ways the problem is not as bad as in 1964, said Eddie Mahe, executive director of the Republican National Committee We took similar losses but there is less of an emotional split in our own ranks." But there clearly was an ideological shifting within the shrunken GOP contingent left in the House by Tuesday's election.

The House Wednesday Group, an informal organization of GOP progressives, lost only one of its 36 members. In contrast, the organization of House conservatives

Richard Scheiker of Pennsylvania

His victory suggests that it was possible for Republicans who had strong individual identification to smrvive the issue that was supposed to be pervasive—the combination of rising prices and slumping employment. The un-employment rate in Michigan has hovered around 9 per cent, and the state was the hardest hit by the energy crisis because of its concentration of automobile

There were exceptions in the election Tuesday, both to the effectiveness of Watergate-type issues and to the general ideological trend.

Republican James Rhodes won the Ohio governorship again despite his persistent refusal to come to grips with scandal allegations arising from his former finances. Republicans lost a progressive governor in Massagained a conservative one in South Carolina, Jack Edwards.

'Southern Strategy' On the whole though the election was a stunning rebuff for the "Southern strategy" that had formed the cornerstone of Richard Nixon's attempt to shape a new American majority. Republican conservatives House seats in Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee and Texas.

"Conservatives are down, defeated," said Mississippi GOP chairman Clarke Reed. "They've prospective conservative alter-native to Mr. Ford.

Ideology aside, the most serious Republican losses were in the patronage and rebuilding capacity. The election left the GOP with 12 out of 50 governorships from office.

Democratic control in the states limits the GOP ability to recover from its severe losses. It also imposes an extraordinary burden on the Republican National Committee. President Ford is publicly committed, if he seeks election, to operating his campaign through the national committee rather than through an outside operation, as President Nixon On the Democratic side, one of the major impacts of Tuesday's results in terms of 1976 was the removal of a leading presidential topeful from the ranks-Gov. John Gilligan of Ohio. His upset defeat at the hands of Mr. Rhodes did. however, project another Ohioan-former astronaut John Glenn-into speculation for second place on the party's next national ticket. Mr. Glenn won a Senate seat by a landslide

over Republican Mayor Ralph

Gov. Wallace, elected to a third erm, continued to play coy about his 1976 plans. On the face of it, however, the party seemed less vulnerable to his pressures as a result of Tuesday's returns. The Democrats picked up a net of at least four governorships, including California New York Illinois and New Jersey.

In all four states, the governor or governor-elect has been mentioned as a prospect for the na-tional ticket—Edmund Brown jr. in California, Hugh Carey in New York, Dan Walker in Illinois, and Brendan Byrne in New Jersey. It has been 18 years since either party has chosen a governor as its standard-bearer, but factors exist that could persuade the Democrats to break that streak. Economy Issue

Foremost could be the emergence of the economy as the primary political issue. This inward focus might provide a climate more conducive to selecting a state administrator schooled in domestic problems, rather than Washington-based Democrat with foreign-policy experience.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., agreed that the economy, along with Watergate, was the dominant issue Tuesday. The Democratic sweep, he said, produced a new cohesion in party ranks that will help whomever is the 1976 can-

While the Democrats in general and the prospective Democratic presidential candidates in particular will be undergoing a time of testing in 1976, so, too, will President Ford.

He campaigned in 20 states for party candidates, a majority of whom were defeated. Among the defeats was a particularly stinging rebuke in Mr. Ford's home congressional district in western Michigan.

But the campaign was not a total loss for the President, who gained credit from Republicans everywhere for being willing to campaign for causes that were rarely promising. But the President now has his work cut out for him with a preponderantly Democratic Congress that is in no mood to set itself as a campaign target in 1976. Americans still look to the White House for leadership, which means that Republican hopes for a comeback now depend squarely on President Ford.

Guerrilla Attacks Flout State of Siege

BUENOS AIRES, Nov. 7 (AP). -Outlawed Marxist guerrillas flouted Argentina's new state of siege today, killing an army officer, burning military vehicles and raiding a busy commuter railroad station.

The attacks apparently signaied a refusal by the terrorists to accept the assumption of broad powers yesterday by President Isabel Peron in order to end what the government called "inhuman and criminal terrorist plan against the entire

Free-Drink Row On U.S. Air Route

NEW YORK, Nov. 7 (NYT).-A free-liquor controversy has erupted on the New York-Florida airline route. National Airlines took out newspaper advertisements seeking to attract coach passengers with an offer of two free cocktails for all adults on flights from New York to Miami and Fort Lauderdale. Drinks in coach class have been $1.50 each. They have been free only in first class.

Eastern Air Lines immediately matched National's offer, and promised to extend it to other routes, but complained that National's action was "unconscionable." Eastern said the drinks would cost it $9 million a year. There was no word from Delta Air Lines, the other nonstop carrier to Florida.

U.S., Spain Adjourn Talks On Bases Pact

Madrid Is Seeking Security Guarantee

MADRID, Nov. 7 (UPD .- The United States and Spain today ended the first round of formal talks aimed at renewing the agreement that grants U.S. armed forces the use of Spanish bases. American officials said the talks were "exploratory" and that neither side established a detailed position.

A joint communiqué described the four days of meetings as "friendly" and said delegations of the two countries would meet in Washington next month. The chief U.S. negotiator was Ambassador-at-Large Robert Mc-Closkey.

Under the terms of the current agreement, due to expire in August of next year, Spain grants the United States the use of air bases near Madrid, Seville and Zaragoza and a Polaris submarine base at Rota, near the Strait of Gibraltar. In exchange, Spain has been receiving technical, economic and cultural aid. Sources close to the Spanish government said Spain was expected to ask the United States for a formal security treaty and U.S. officials confirmed that, in the talks, Spanish emphasis has been in the security field.

Mr. McCloskey, who arrived from Madrid in a U.S. government aircraft, was met at a military air base near here by the American ambassador to Portugal. Stuart Scott, and senior Foreign Ministry officials.

Mr. McCloskey said he would meet President Francisco da Costa Gomes and Premier Vasco dos Santos Gonçalves tomorrow "to continue talks already in progress about Laies."

The U.S. lease on the air base ran out in February. Portuguese and American officials have been discussing its renewal for about five months. Lajes is part of the Azores island group, about 300 miles west of the Portuguese mainland. More than 3,000 U.S. Air Force personnel are stationed on Lajes, In September of last year, the United States considered withdrawing from Lajes. But a month later, the base became strategically important as a refueling point for U.S. planes transporting war materials to Israel during the

Says 5 Bills Died During Congress Recess

Ford Pocket-Veto Claims Stirring Dispute

By John P. Mackenzie

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7 (WP) -Without walting to see whether the new Congress will be "vetoproof," President Ford is asserting the right to a pocket veto of bills sent to him during the current election recess.

Since the recess began on Oct 18, Mr. Ford has withheld his signature from five bills and has sent them back to Congress, declaring that they have been

The Constitution gives the President 10 days from the receipt of a hill to sign it, let it become haw without his signature or veto it and send it back to Congres to consider his objections an vote on overriding the veto.

Under the pocket-veto provision the passage of 10 days makes a bill law "unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return" to the House and Senate so that the overriding procedures can be followed.

Critics Agree Both the White House and critics in the Senate agree the implication of the five presidential messages is that even if Congress votes to override the vetoes by the required two-thirds majority, President Ford will still claim that the bills cannot become law because his pocket-veto killed

The bills involved vary widely in content. They would: • Change the way the govern-ment administers $680 million in vocational rehabilitation funds. · Increase protections for migrant farm laborers.

· Make it harder for the Interior Department to grant rightsof-way for power transmission lines running through wildlife refuges and national parks. • Pay private claims in two hardship cases. Congress must decide when it returns on Nov. 18 whether some or all of the bills call for votes to override the vetoes-thereby

Spanish Premier Sees Campaign To Force Him Out

An official described as "absointely untrue" some reports here that Mr. Arlas, 65, had offered his resignation to the head of state, Gen. Prancisco Franco.

"It's business a. usual here," the official said. He described Mr. Arias as at first amused and

The Premier's office declined to speculate on which factions were opposed to Mr. Arlas, But the official said that the office was "worried in reference to what seems to be a concentrated campaign" against Mr. Arias.

Mr. Arias fired liberal Informa tion Minister Pio Cabanillas last week after rightists protested Mr. Cabanillas's open-door press pol-icy. Finance Minister Antonio Barrera de Irimo and a dozen other top officials later resigned of the bills, requiring President Ford to veto them again if he

Charges of White House abuse of the pocket-veto power have been made with increasing frequency since former President Richard Nixon proclaimed during the five-day 1970 Christmas recess that he was pocket-vetoing a health bill and it was useless for Congress to attempt to override it. The French legal code will define crimes, but the British judicial procedure will be used to judge them. Officials conceded that the differences would create certain problems. For instance, the French code continues to consider certain crimes as capital crimes, but the British system has abolished the death penalty. Currently, there are both En-

Honduras Striving to Get Aid to Its Hurricane Victims

SAN PEDRO SULA, Hondoras, Nov. 7 (NYI).—More than a month after a hurricane devastated large areas of this country, the rivers along the north-ern coast are still swollen, the land is saturated and 30,000 people are reported to be isolated by floodwaters and mud

But food, medicine and clothing donated by the United States and other countries appears to be reaching the victims with a minimum of loss.

"Relief supplies are going to the people who need them with maybe a 10-per-cent shrinkage— which is a good record." says Arthur E. Flynn, a representative of the League of Red Cross Societies. Mr. Fiynn recently investigated reports that supplies were being hoarded stolen or sold, and found them false. The Honduran authorities have appealed to the United States and other countries for helicopters to fly relief supplies to maccessible areas. The United States sent four helicopters after the hurri-cane struck but pulled them out three weeks ago. Meanwhile, the supplies are getting through to most of the victims by truck and tractor, horse and mule, and

Situation is Difficult "It's a difficult situation but the Hondurans are devising in-genious ways to get relief to the people, said the U.S. ambas-sador, Philip Sanchez, just back from a two-day tour of the most devastated regions in the Sula and Aguan valleys. In the midst of the emergency, there were strong rumors of a government crisis. Foreign Minister Cesar Batres resigned "for personal reasons" and there were reports-denied by the government-that the entire cabinet had stepped down.

Press accounts linked the po-litical turnoil to the reported mishandling of the relief effort, but informed sources said that the root of the problem was strong opposition from the private sector to the government's

Even before the hurricane, Honduras was poorer than every other country in Latin America except Haiti. The chief of state, Gen. Oswaldo Lopez Arellano, heads a mild military regime that rules without a constitution or a congress but permits a relatively free press, political parties and other basic civil rights. "There is complete stability in the government and throughout the country," the Minister of Interior and Justice, Col. Juan Mel-gar Castro, declared recently. He denied there was a government crisis and said that the President was determined to carry out the agrarian reform

Assessments of the country's losses in the hurricane are stag-gering. Lt. Col. Eduardo Andino Lopez, coordinator for the permanent Council for National Emergency, said that 8,000 to 10,000 people had been killed.

"The devestation is much worse than the Managua earthquake of Christmas, 1972 because in addi-tion to human losses, the couneconomy has been crippled," said Fernando Hernandez de Aguero, a Persivian economist who is representing the Organization of American States here.

A mission sent by the United States Agency for International Development visited Honduras from Sept. 29 to Oct. 2 and drafted a grim report on the damages About 600,000 people, or 20 per cent of the population, had been directly affected by the storm, it said. Material losses were estimated at $500 million or nearly one-half the gross national product. The destruction included ?? per cent of the bening production, the courty's main export, as well as livestock, much of the corn, rice and citrus crops, and roads bridges, railroad lines and

E. Germany Mobilizes to Get Crop In

BERLIN, Nov. 7 (Reuters).-East Germany is engaged in an all-out effort to catch up on harvesting and sowing schedules, badly hit by weeks of rain. Abcraft are helping to sow thousands of acres of the winter grain crop, because the rain had made the ground boggy and ruled out the use of normal equipment, the ADN news agency reported

ADN said 3,375,000 acres 77.7 per cent of the total envisaged for the winter grain—had been sown

Meanwhile, press reports said that thousands of volunteers, ranging from journalists to party functionaries, had been working in the fields to catch up on time lost in the suger-beet harvest. Weather Improves

Two-and-a-half times as much rain as usual fell during the month of October according to official figures. With the improved weather of the past few days, farmers are working in shifts to accelerate harvesting and sowing, ADN reported. Only 41.9 per cent of the sugarbeet crop has been gathered, according to ADN. At this date last year, 90 per cent of the crop had been brought in. Machines and workers have been sent to the Magdeburg, Halle and Leipzig areas, where the sugar-beet crop is concentrated, to help in the harvest.

Troops on Standby

All members of the army and air force have been ordered to return to their units from leave, and all military forces throughout the country have been placed on standby.

Panic was reported among civilians in Tororo, in eastern Uganda, and at Masaka, north of the Tanzanian border, as disorderly troops—fighting among themselves and looting food stores poured through city streets.

The Uganda economy wavered ester. The Amin administration's blundering attempts to run industries expropriated from British and from deported Asians have caused shortages of staples such as sugar and flour. The Price of Sugar

Inflation and shortages have boosted the price of sugar to 20 shillings a kilogram—at the official rate of exchange, $1.30. Public transportation grows daily more haphazard because Uganda does not have the foreign exchange to buy spare parts. Amid all these problems, Gen.

Schlesinger Plans To Increase U.S. Forces in Alaska WASHINGTON, Nov. 7 (WP) .-

Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger said that he intends to increase the number of U.S. combat troops in Alaska, partly to help safeguard expanding investment in oil production there.

Mr. Schlesinger did not give a timetable for his plan, and mili-tary sources suggested that it could take some time, perhaps years, since Mr. Schlesinger is also trying to raise U.S. combat strength in Europe. .But the defense chief said was his intention to add eventually at least a 4,000 to 5,000-man brigade to the one now based in Alaska, and to strengthen U.S. air forces in the region Mr. Schlesinger disclosed his plans in a brief press conference last week during a visit to Elmendorf Air Force Base in Alaska. He said that when the Army, in the post-Vietnam era, was scaled down from 16 divisions to the current 13 1/3, the forces in Alaska, which then consisted of two brigades, "were unduly reduc-ed" to a single brigade.

The Germans accepted the general principle of cleaning up the rivers, but protested there was limited action that the federal government could take. The responsibility for preventing the Rhine's pollution was largely in the hands of the German states, Bonn said.

The Netherlands was annoyed about the increasing quantities of potassium salts that are being discharged into the river, reducing the Rhine's capacity to refreshen its waters. Although it was a low-key meet-

Tight Underpants to Be Studied As Factor in Virility of Men

EDINBURGH, Nov. 7 (AP) .- A woman doctor is investigating the possibility that tight underpants affect men's virility and says she would like to test her theory on kilted Scotsmen and unclad Nigerian tribesmen. Dr. Ann Chandley, 38, a cenetics researcher at Edinburgh's

Western General Hospital, said she has found that animals such as rabbits and gorillas produce sperm with a fertility count of about 98 per cent.

"But no man who has been tested has sperm that is more than 75-per-cent perfect," she said. "It could be that right underpants cause high temperatures in the testicles of civilized man and that brings about abnormalities."

Dr. Chandley said she and her colleagues in the hospital's Clinical and Population Cytogenetics Unit, which officially opened today, hope to do research on members of Scottish High-land regiments who traditionally wear nothing under their kilts,

MIAMI, Nov. 7 (UPI),-The first sea blockade of U.S. waters since the Civil War resulted in the seizure of an ounce of marijuana and 50 undersized lobsters, informed sources said yesterday.

The blockade of 275 miles of Florida's east coast by 29 vessels and six aircraft, which began at 5 p.m. Tuesday, ended on schedule at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

'Mandates' for Mr. Ford

When it comes to extracting "mandates" From election results we can be as arbitrary as the next person. In fact, a certain subsective arbitrariness is inherent in the traditional postelection game of figuring out who has been "mandated" to do what. And so. with that understood, we do not hesitate to share with you our own thoughts about some of the things we think the voters were trying to say to President Ford, to the Democrats and to the newly-elected government of the District of Columbia in Tuesday's

We begin with President Ford who chose to make himself something of an issue by his dogged, not to say frenetic, campaigning on behalf of Republican candidates in some 20 states. There is no use arguing how much his efforts may have helped or hindered his party's cause in this place or that; one has only to look at the overall results to conclude that Mr. Ford didn't help his party's fortunes

And we can think of at least a couple of reasons that this was so. One is that the American public is genuinely hungering, in a general way, for presidential leadershipfor something to serve as an antidote, if you will, to the shame and squalor of the Nixon years. And the other is that Gerald Ford hasn't satisfied this need because, not to put too fine a point upon it, he hasn't been performing like a president. In the first few weeks, perhaps, he may have seemed to be doing so. In the euphoria of what has come to be called the English-muffin phase, there was a wonderfully refreshing decency at the White House; there was dancing - and an open door. There were even a few firm decisions to break with earlier policies. Then eame the sudden shock of his pardoning of Richard Nixon on grounds that seemed to have a lot more to do with personal loyalty and compassion than sound public policy, and after that the plunge into rough and partisan politicking for no more compelling public purpose than his stated concern that "if I don't do anything and we lose, Republicans in the House would say I didn't even

Well, the Republicans in the House-or what's left of them-can't say that. The President certainly tried. But in the process, he behaved so much in the manner of & House minority leader, or of a party chairman, or of the personal protector of his predecessor, as to raise quite serious questions about who he really thinks he is-and what he now intends to be. We cannot pretend to know. But we suspect that what a lot of voters were saying on Tuesday, by indirection and by implication, was that they understand and condemn the abuses and misdeeds of Watergate; that they hold the Republican party to some degree responsible; that they expect better of their government; that they are not much interested in rancorous and partisan debate over which is the party of peace (or of inflation); and that they desperately yearn for leadership in a search for real solutions to the real problems of unemployment and high prices and energy shortages that hit closest to home. * * *

In short, as all this pertains to Mr. Ford, the voters seem to be saying that they want the President to be more like a president. Their message does not include, of course, an explanation of how he is now supposed to deal, presidentially, with an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress; that's how it often is with "mandates,"

But the logic of the situation suggests that if the President is to deal effectively with the urgent problems he faces, he is going to have to temper partisanship in favor of collaboration with the opposition party. There may be something going for him here, however; if we correctly read the anxious mood of the electorate, the voters will also be expecting a similar spirit of constructive collaboration from the Democrats.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

Up to the Democrats

The Democratic party has drawn bandsome gains out of the difficulties of the incumbent Republicans. The brutal realities of inflation and recession, the fear of depression, and the memory of Watergate worked together to wreak heavy damage on the GOP from New York to California.

If the Democrats are to capitalize on Tuesday's victory to win the presidency in two years' time, they urgently need leaders of national stature. None seems to have emerged from this week's election. The Democrats are left with the circle of more or less familiar faces in the Senate, none of homa, who preceded John Mitchell as the whom as yet has stirred much enthu-

The midterm election had its biggest impact in the House of Representatives, where the Democrats increased their margin of control by more than 40 seats, providing them with a genuine working majority. Some Republican stalwarts in the House were defeated while several capable Democratic excongressmen, such as Richard Ottinger and Tames Schener of New Fork, were returned. * * *

Economic dissatisfaction was clearly the primary source of the increase in Democratic majorities and the loss of Republican House seats almost uniformly across the nation. Moral issues also conditioned popular thinking. The appalling deceit practiced by Nixon. the unmasking of Spiro Agnew as a bribetaker and a tax-evader, the selling of government decisions for cash from corrupt corporations, and the blatant favoritism and injustice of President Ford's pardon of Nixon -these, and other scandals, have rocked the American people during the last two years.

Americans are still a people with a moral sense in public affairs, despite recurrent episodes of political corruption and despite the materialism and hedonistic self-indulgence that characterizes too much of the nation's style of life. Americans retain their capacity for indignation about wrongdoers in high places. That indignation was expressed Tuesday in many parts of the country. The ouster of several Republicans who had supported Nixon on the House Judiciary Committee, notably Rep. Charles Sandman of New Jersey, exemplified this protest vote.

In the Senate, those Republican incumbents who have progressive records on economic issues and who had kept their distance from the Nixon White House fared the most successfully. In this group were Sens, Jacob Javits of New York, Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania, Charles Mathias of Maryland, and Robert Packwood of Oregon.

But in the more conservative farm and desert states, right-wing Republican candidates proved in a few instances that personal style and skillful campaigning could offset economic issues and the association with Nixon. Thus, Sen. Henry Beilmon in Oklamanager of Nixon's presidential bid in 1968 and Sen. Robert Dole in Kansas, who used to be Nixon's most aggressive defender in the Senate, both squeezed back into office.

In Colorado, however, Democrats picked up a Senate seat, profiting from both the anti-Republican trend and a superior campaign by their own nominee, Gary Hart. The loser was Sen. Peter Dominick, a two-term Goldwater conservative whose reactionary views are now out of step with the environmentminded majority.

The Democrats increased the number of statehouses under their control but, as usual, personalities and local issues were more important than any national trend. It is hard to believe, for example, that Ohio voters had much concern for post-Watergate morality when they defeated Gov. John Gilligan, one of the abler Democratic state executives, and replaced him with ex-Gov. James Rhodes, a routine partisan with a questionable record.

If the Democrats have not vet found national leaders, have they the capacity to formulate a national program? Now that they have increased their strength in the House and the Senate, it is up to them to achieve the coherence and inner discipline that will enable them to offer viable alternatives to the program of the Ford administration. The public also wants to avoid any worsening of unemployment and poverty. The Democrats can justify Tuesday's vote of confidence only if they develop a balanced program to meet these divergent economic

Mideast War Threat

The possibility of a new [Mideast] war has arisen at a time when the Western alliance is no more prepared to deal with its consequences than it was a year ago. No matter who starts the war, there would almost certainly be a second application of the oil weapon. It would be likely to be applied over a longer period and more severely than hast time. This would be so whether the war ended in an Arab or an Israeli victory or another stalemate. In the course of the war there would be no doubt the same rift between the Americans and the Europeans as to how far the Israelis should be helped: Indeed it could well be much deeper than before since over the past year the Europeans have become generally more pro-Arab and more than ever frightened of the consequences of an oil embargo.

U.S. Hunts-The Fox Usually Wins

fox hunt. All that was needed was the written permission of a few estate-owners for the field of horses and hounds to gallop the old estates have been subdivided, 10 or 100 times, and the old paths now cross houses and patios, power lines and supermarkets? provise or die.

The Smithtown Hunt did not die. While three other hunts on Long Island closed in recent Smithtown has found patches of forest and field to pursue its ancient ritual, now at the peak of its season. On Fridays and Sundays, between 25 and 100 riders, clad in traditional red and black outfits looking as if they had slipped right out of a 19th-century Ening hounds across the diminish ing open fields of Long Island. This is one of 16 "recognized" hunts in the New York - New Jersey-Connecticut area. In the southern half of the country, fox hunting is flourishing, swelling the total to 140 hunts in North America.

"We are not killers," says Dr. Arthur Fredericks of Northport, master of the Smithtown Hunt. "We have an organized, exhilaratlng sport. The main thing is the z animal to follow your hounds. It (2) is like having a front-row seat in a drama with the pageantry and the beauty of the chase."

The Leader

Dr. Fredericks, a veterinarian, the leader of the group that meets every Sunday for the grueling two-hour ritual of jumps and gallops—the hounds following not a fox, but the scent of fox. An hour before the hunt, one of the members drags a bag-containing fox scent—over the ground, imitating the general course a jox would take.

On Fridays the members hunt for a real fox, which members say still exist in Suffolk County. The releasing of trapped foxes is considered unethical, and hunters insist they do not do it. Members often cite the origin of the custom in the farmers' desire to Tij their land of foxes.

Let's face it, the fox enjoys the chase. Dr. Fredericks said. When he gets tired, he goes into his hole and is safe. We call his going to the earth.' The You is happy and I'm happy and the hounds know he's safe, too. - tire day.

"It used to be a millionaire's sport," Dr. Fredericks said. "But now a middle-income person can hunt if he wants."

Costs vary greatly from one hunt to another. One in New Jersey, for example, costs around $250 for a single membership and $350 for a family. Capping fees cost around $10 to $15. Most of the Smithtown Hunt members own their horses, which they bring in vans, and are often active in horse shows.

Clubhouse

The base of the Smithtown Hunt is its clubhouse, an old estate home on the grounds of the Long Island Lighting Company's nuclear plant. Members paused midway through their hunt on Sunday for a paper cup containing ounter's port. After the hunt, members and some guests returned for drinks and

"Now all we have is a walking club called the Winter Wheezers-and we still get permission to walk the land." In addition, there are numerous hunts "unrecognized" by the Masters of Foxhounds Association of America. One such group is the Hidden Hollow Hounds of Red Bank, N.J., operated by Michael Torpey. This group is popular among New York City hunters like Bob Cerullo, who owns a car-repair shop in Brook-

THEATER IN BRUSSELS

'Streetcar'—The Impact Is Intact

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

RUSSELS (IHT .- "A Streetcar Named Desire," first seen on Broadway in 1947, is "in" again. During the last year it has been revived to profitable returns in Los Angeles (with the screen actor. Jon Voight, as Stanley Kowalski), in New York and in London. This week it is being performed (in English) in Brussels by the American Theater Company at the Petite Salie of the Theatre National

Tennessee Williams's celebrated play has survived changing fash-When it was new some officials judged it "obscene" and was banned in Boston and edited in other cities, Attitudes have changed but this play has not. It is no longer a shocker, but it can still hold an audience rapt and despite its occasional melodramatic overtones that skirt caricature, it is saved from ab-surdity by the firmness of its

The play centers, as most will remember, on Blanche Du Bois, Southern schoolteacher whose youthful marriage ends in tragedy when her homosexual husband commits suicide. She zeeks relief by dabbling in sex and becomes an incurable neurotic with delusions of grandeur. She goes to visit her married sister in New Orleans where her pretentions enrage her low-born brother-inlaw. He discovers her shady past. prevents her prospective marriage to one of his friends and as a final act of vengeance violates her. Her humiliations lead to her mental disintegration and she ends up in an asylum. Williams recounts the story with a symptom theatricality that the years have not weakened.

The present production in Brussels is most satisfactory in its interpretation, though the majority of its players are semi-However, Myriam Langford, who takes the role of Blanche and who has directed, is from the professional theater and effectively conveys the scheming of the harassed heroine and the pathos of her fate, rising to the challenge of all the difficult scenes to make them her own. John Boyle as her executioner, Kowalski, Mary Ann Hill as his submissive wife and Jack Hill as the suitor who rejects Blanche, acquit themselves well. Mrs Langford has staged the proceedings so that the action has persuasive unity in the face of too many curtain interruptions. The decor is of necessity but a plain and simple reproduction of Jo Mielziner's memorable atmospheric setting for the Broadway original, but the play is the thing and it lives again, its impact in-

During the past five years, the American Theater Company has produced a series of American plays—among them "The Effects of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds," "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf," "Plaza Sulte" and "The Boys in the Band." It is now planning to stage O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey into Night."

Brussels is an active theater town, offering a considerable variety in entertainment. Eric Pradier delivers a moving portraval of the unhappy Santa Claus, but the anecdote is too slender to full three acts. The Rideau will follow it this week with the first Continental staging of Christopher Hampton's "Savages,"

The Belgian dramatic renaissance of the early century—which brought Maurice Maeterlinck, Emile Verhaeren, Georges Rodenbach, Paul Spaak, the social playwright Gustave Vanzype, and Fernand Crommelynck into the international spotlight—is now a faint memory and seems to have no heirs. Nor has anyone in the commercial theater followed in the footsteps of that popular quently revived native dramatist, though at the moment Maeterlinck's "Intérieur" is playing at the Centre Culturel Franck.

It is he, too, who undertakes the adaptations, revising the texts of such works as "Macbeth," "Till Uylenspiegel," or "Le Cid" to fit the pattern of Toone style. The current production is "Carmen" with Bizet melodies mixed with popular airs and with the Spanish dramatis personae deliberately employing strong local accent.

There is another unusual theater in Brussels: the Théatre de la Gaite. During a recent matinee, the hall was filled, but all the spectators seemed to be 65 or over. The show consisted of vintage vaudeville with overweight chorus girls, comics cracking venerable lokes and with the principal singer "ring a parody of "Mon Homme." The nostalgia of this spectacle was overwhelming and a more appreciative public has seldom been seen.

The foreign play dominates with Miller's "Creation of the World and Other Business" at the Théa-tre National, another American play, "One Flew Over the Cuckeo's Nest" at the Théatre Royal, Marcel Achard's "Domino" with Danielle Darrieux at the Théatre Royal des Galeries, Montherlant's "Cardinal d'Espagne" at the Co-médie Claude Volter and Lanoux's Le Tourniquet" at the Théatre Molière At SHAPE headquarters, Arthur Laurent's "Invitation to a March" is being acted in English. The cafe-theater has more national flavor, with the "La Balayette Infernale" at the Le 13 of special interest.

LONDON (NTT). — Dictionaries are usually prides of collective enterprise, but Eric Partridge prefers the solo fight, singlehandedly putting unruly words into ranks and orders. He makes his own discoveries and commits his own mistakes, and his dictionaries are there for all the world to consult: on slang, origins. Then came the Depression. "And you'll say, 'what good could come out of that?' Well, it from inside, the author's art is not a kind of heroism. Partridge has found the longer run of England's literature more fertile of examples than America's. "I don't talk about American and British, English and American," he said. "They're one language. Shell Reports Doubled Net In Quarter

LONDON, Nov. 7 (AP-DJ)_-The Royal Dutch-Shell group today reprired third-quarter net income of £304.3 million double the £166.8 million earned a year months was £871.7 million, up from £423,8 million.

The group, however, questioned the significance of the figures, saying the generally accepted accounting principles used to calculate the results "have progressively less validity."

Also, it warned that "the international off business outside North America gives cause for

For the third quarter, Shell said the integrated profit margin on oil trading outside North America was around $1 a barrel, down about 15 cents from the first half Effectively, however, it said the oil trading margin was only about 50 cents a harrel The remaining 50 cents arose from unrealised inventory appreciation. Increases in the cost of crude oil imposed by the producing countries from Oct. 1, together with cost inflation, will complete-ly absorb the oil trading margin unless market prices are allowed to respond to these increasing costs, Shell warned. Shell said the accounting principles used to calculate the group's result only provide a reasonable view of the true financial state of a business in times of relative price stability. Their application in current conditions of spiralling costs, especially in the oil industry, distorts the underlying realities, it

In a continuing business, it argued, the part of profits used in replacing inventories at higher cost should not be viewed as current profits. Yet, it said, for tax and other purposes this part is treated as if it had been real-

Moreover, Shell said that in times of inflation, conventional accounting principles exaggerate not only the profits, by inade-quate depreciation provisions, but also the return on capital by understatement of the current value of the capital employed.

GM's Head Appeals for Car Buyers

Newspaper Campaign Follows Sales Slump

By David C. Smith DETROIT, Nov. 7 (WP).-Hard hit by sagging sales, General Motors Corp. has taken an unprecedented move: GM's top man is appealing directly to pros-pective car buyers in nationwide newspaper advertisements. The ad, which broke in yesterday afternoon's newspapers, is signed by GM board chairman Richard Gerstenberg. Veteran Detroit observers could not recall a similar campaign in which a top executive took up the sale cudgel except for the 1950s, when American Motors for president George Romney asked buyers to give up their "gas-guzzling dino-

GM said the ad will appear in 150 major metropolitan news-papers, in 29 other cities where GM has plants, in 50 black newspapers and in national news-papers. There are no plans to extend the campaign to radio, television and magazines but it will be repeated in newspapers,

In the ad, Mr. Gerstenberg answers President Ford's "don't buy" advice by saying that "when new cars replace old, the nation's transportation gains efficiency."

Emphasizing that the corporation's 1975 cars use less fuel, emit less poliution, and thus cost less to maintain, and have more safe-ty features, Mr Gerstenberg maintains in his message that "purchasing new cars is the common-sense kind of conservation

The 380-page report accuses the oil companies of paying practically" no taxes, of "chesting" on prices paid for imported crude oil and of entering into "understandings" to fix domestic prices It also cites "the ambiguity of the administration's relations" with the companies. The report says that within the Union des Chambres Syndicales de l'Industrie du Pétrole (UCSIP), a trade body, both CFP and ELF-Erap "pursue a policy which isn't different from that of multinational (oil) companies" when it comes to suppressing competition.

Pay No Taxes

Referring to taxation, the report says CFP and ELF-Erap "pay no corporate taxes in France. while French subsidiaries of foreign oil companies pay "ridiculously low" taxes.

It says oil companies "cheat" when it comes to calculating the price paid for crude imported into France. They maintain it costs them an average of $9.42 a barrel. while the report estimates an average of $8.64.

The report accuses the govern-ment and the departments responsible for energy. The links between the (energy) administra-tion and the (French) oil comparies is like a link between a feudal lord to a vassal," it says. The report calls for establish-

Democrats' Landslide Win Means Hotter Economy

By Peter Milius WASHINGTON, Nov. 7 (WP).—Tuesday's election results mean national economic policy will be set in major part for the next two years by the Democrats in Congress, and Democrats have been sobered by that thought. "They've clearly got the ball," an aide to President Gerald Ford said, and Sen. Walter Mondale, D.-Minn., one of the Democratic presidential hopefuls whose fortures may depend on the course of the economy, agreed. The heat is on us

The main economic steps the President proposed lest month—a spending slowdown and a temporary surfax on corporations and "upper-level" individual incomes, offset by some permanent tax concessions for both business and investors -appear to have little chance of passage now. There was little enough enthusiasm for them before the elections, and Democrats interpret the election returns as clearly a call for

But what the Democrats will now put forward instead

The President has said he will send Congress this month a list of perhaps $5 billion in proposed spending cutbacks to fight inflation, and that he wants the cutbacks acted on this year.

The Democrats are unlikely to do it, in part because they are likely to wait until they have their new majorities in place next year before they do much of anything. Beyond that, they will argue now that recession is at least as great a danger as milation—unemployment is rising as well as prices—and that spending cutbacks would only weaken the economy further. "It's going to be tougher to hold the line fiscally," a Ford aide acknowledged.

The same combination of politics and economics is likely to doom the President's proposed surtax, at least in its present form. The Democrats, on the other hand, are likely to want to spend more money than he has proposed to aid the un-

Sindona Says Bank Liquidation Is Unjust

Michele Sindons has reportedly charged in a suit filed at the Milan tribunal that the forced liquidation of his Banca Privata Italiana "had no reason to be carried out," because the losses claimed against the bank were in fact attributable "in major part" to International Westminster Bank, a subsidiary of National West-

Prices Edge Ahead on Big Board

NEW YORK, Nov. 7 (IHT) .-Stocks ground out a small gain on the New York Stock Exchange today though some analysts said the rise lacked conviction.

Reynolds Securities vice-president and director of investment policy Robert Stovall observed, "The market seems to like the election results."

He also said Reynolds finds the public more aggressive in the market now than institutions, and said issues being purchased in many instances were depressed in price with solid dividends—the kind of stock the public likes."

He added that the market has been doing well despite unfavorable economic news and said some of the profit-taking expected recently by professional traders has failed to materialize.

IBM rose 3 1/4 to 187 1/4 after having tumbled more than 10 points yesterday, when the Justice Department said the break up of IBM was the only way to promote competition in the computer industry. Great Western United, another

Krupp Earnings Outlook Gloomy

Fried. Krupp Huettenwerke's earnings position developed well in the first nine months of this year, in spite of a strong increase in costs, but prospects for the future are unfavorable. A decline in volume of sales is expected and increased materials and personnel costs will negatively influence earnings, Krupp says in an interim report. Sales expectations indicate that no upturn in domestic steel demand can be expected in the short term. Export demand is falling to more normal levels, with a downturn in orders expected in the fourth 1974 quarter. Krupp-will reduce production levels in the coming months in some rolled steel plant.

DENNIS THE MENACE

WORDS & FACES By Hiram Haydn. Harcourt Brace Iovanovich. 346 pp. $3.95.

Reviewed by Gerald Walker

A lot of people in publishing have missed Hiram Haydn since his death last December, six months after finishing this memoir of three decades as editor, publisher, writer and writing teacher. He was, successively, an editor at Crown Publishers, the Bobbs-Merrill Company, Random House, cofounder of Atheneum Publishers and copublisher of Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. Although a book editor is often someone who reads manuscripts on commuter trains and then late into the night, Mr. Haydn found the time to teach a celebrated novel workshop at The New School for a dozen years, to edit The American Scholar for 30 years, and write "The Counter-Renaissance" as well as four novels. He started late in publishing—at 37 in 1944—but a man who gets his doctorate at Columbia in one year is not a man who wastes time.

Nor will reading Hiram Haydn's last book waste the time of anyone who has the slightest interest in the book-publishing process in this country today. Perhaps that should not be called "process," but "business," as Mr. Haydn soon learned it was from his first boss, Crown's shrewd. crusty Nat Wartels. Mr. Haydn was brought in to build up what Mr. Wartels had called a "high-class fiction list . . . you know, Class . . . things that make peo-ple feel good." He then found that Mr. Wartels's definition of 'class" veered toward blockbuster best sellers with a high measure of sex and violence—but no sexual deviance and no victorious bad guys. "People won't like that, Hiram."

With clear understatement, Mr. Haydn concluded that "Crown was not a literary house" and after a five-year apprentice-ship there moved on to become New York editor for Bobbs Merrill. The new job represented a kind of editorial nirvana to him, for he took it with the clear understanding that he could accept or reject books on his own without having to check with the head office in Indianapolis. But this was to reckon without firsthand knowledge of 71-year-old David Laurance Chambers, the high-handed, longtime president of Bobbs-Merrill. On his first trip to Indianapolis after being hired, Mr. Haydn was ushered into Mr. Chambers's office where the old man first beguiled him with the story of his own dedication and tenure at Bobbs. He expressed his delight at Mr. Haydn's joining the company. Then, Mr. Haydn recalls, stressed the crucial importance of our intimate collaboration. assured me of the priority I would have on his time when, believing I had found a worthy manuscript, I sent it on for his approval." Mr. Haydn forced himself to remind his employer of their agreement and with the help of sympathetic board members, successfully defended his independence, but only for the first time The meeting marked the start of a four-year struggle with Mr. Chambers and Mr. Haydn's introduction to corporate in fighting Through it all, Mr. Haydn pubhished such notable works as william Styron's "Lie Down in Darkness:" (Mr. Styron had come out of Mr. Haydn's New School novel workshop, among others) and had otherwise begun to put Bobbs back on the literary map. However, when Ran-dom House made him a good offer-a generous salary and time off for his own writing-he took isfactory relationship with Bennett Cert, Donald Klopfer and Robert K. Hass, the three partners. There were disagreements and explosions (because by this time Mr. Haydn's temper and self-confidence had grown to match that of the mercurial Mr. Cerf). But at least they were straightforward disagree-ments and explosions; and, because there was mutual respect, there were immediate apologies. Ultimately, though, Mr. Haydn could not resist the temptation to be his own boss and with Pat Knopf (Alfred A. Knopf ir.) and Simon Michael Bessie, he left Random House and began Atheneum Publishers in 1959. The story of the erosion of that partnership, with Messrs. Knopf and Bessie losing faith in Mr. Haydn's judgment and ultimately forcing him out, is the most engrossing section of this book It was a painful episode for Mr. Haydn, and he does not hide the pain. But it is a tribute to Mr. Haydn's generosity that he does not set it down spitefully or defensively. He tells it as it registered on him but then he goes out of his way to stress that if Mr. Knopf or Mr. Bessie told their side of it, the same incidents might have an entirely dif-

A shaken Mr. Haydn is taken on as copublisher by the brilliant William Jovanovich and his last: decade in publishing is marked apparently by an entirely har-monious professional relationship. Lengthy quotations from Mr. Jovanovich's deeply personal and philosophical letters to Mr. Haydn after Mr. Haydn's heart attack some years back attest to the friendship as well.

It is these letters that point up something that some readers will find missing in this book: one wants to hear Hiram Haydn in this vein, too. He was a good man, a man, one is sure. Whose head and heart would have been worth getting into; one wants to know him better, hear more of the details of his editing of a book or why he himself wrote; fiction what he got out of life, Instead, we have a series of snapshots of other people-literally hundreds of writers and editors, too numerous to tick off

That is interesting enough. Yet maybe Hiram Haydn knew best, after all. He writes that only "the self-admitted great" do not pause to write of themselves. He chose to leave the most unusual monument of them all: a modest book provement.

For the beginner who hopes to make the long trek to expert, there are three possible roads:

• He can plat with his friends and neighbors, a cul-de-sac that offers no hope of substantial im-

• He can play duplicate games in a local club, a popular but alow route • He can venture boldly into tournament play by competing in

The third choice is good value, since the players receive afterward an analysis sheet and an expert commentary.

The diagramed deal from a novice game played many years ago illustrates a point that would slude some of the novices. After East opens three clubs in the teeth of the vulnerability, South overcalls three hearts, and lands in four hearts after West has raised chibs Four spades is a reasonable alternative contract; in each case the play of the spade suit is crucial.

South ruffs the opening club lead and sees he can make 11 tricks if both major suits behave well-perhaps even 12 with a minor miracle in the diamond suit. The ace and king of hearts are cashed, revealing that West has a sure trump trick, and South must decide whether to play spades before diamonds or vice versa. In other circumstances, it might be right to lead to the spade ace, planning then to lead to the nine, a safety play to ensure three tricks. But the contract is in jeopardy, so this is no time for safety plays. If the spade king is cashed, collecting the ten from East, it would be tempting to finesse the jack. But South should recognize that East is unlikely to have begun with a singleton spade as well as a singleton heart, and that he cannot make four spade tricks in any event if West began with Q 8 6 4. So, if he persevers with spaces, he should play to the ace and drop the queen to make the game.

Slightly better is to play dismonds before spades, leading to the diamond king and thus exploring the faint chance that Bas started with a doubleton ace. By continuing diamonds at every opportunity, South eventually establishes a diamond trick in the dummy and, more important, get a count on the distribution. The bidding suggested that East began with seven clubs, and the red-suit distribution is known, so the declarer infers a doubleton spade on his right.

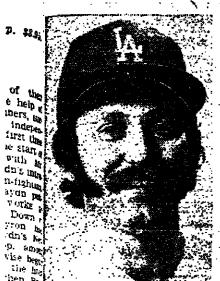

He now has a psychological problem when the spade king collects the ten. An expert play ing against an expert would strongly suspect East of false carding with a doubleton ten Bu this is a novice game. Novice seldom make well-timed false cards, so a perceptive South car lead to the ace with some confidence to make his game hi dropping the queen.

The dominance of 7-foot-2 Kareem Abdul-Jabbar as a basketball player can be measured by three statistics involving the Milwankee Bucks. The team's offense revolved around Abdul-Jabbar last season. His presence meant many easy open shots when opposition defenses collapsed around him. The Bucks led the NBA in field-goal percentage (49.1) and total assists. This year, with Abdul-Jabbar out with an eye injury, they are 17th in field-goal percentage (41.3) and 16th in assists.

The Bucks also led the league in point-differential last season, scoring 8.1 points more per game than they yielded. They are 17th this year, at a rate of minus 9.7. Only the newborn New Orleans Jaw are worse, at a rate of minus

Swen Nater, the 1973-74 American Basketball Association rookle of the year, came up with a new honor when he led ABA rebounders last week. It was the first time that Kentucky's 7-foot-2 Artis Gilmore was not the week, leader since entering the league sitting there and told them that cek remained from the team that San Diego's Caldwell Jones at I had to go," Averbach said.

Anerbach had coached full time. 16.8 and Indiana's George Mc-Ginnis at 15.7.

The Atlanta Hawks have started four different centers in their first eight games. Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons knew that inconsistency at center would be one of the Hawks' biggest weaknesses this year. He used Bob Kaufiman and Clyde Lee successfully on De-troit's Bob Lanier. But the next game, they were outplayed by John Gianelli and Phil Jackson of the New York Knicks. Pitzsimmons also started second-year men Dwight Jones and Saturday gave rookie Mike Sojourner his first start, against the Celtics.

Sojourner, a sophomore at Utah last year, responded with 20 points, 17 rebounds, three assists, two steals and two blocked shots in 38 minutes. Solourner was the first of the draft choices Hawks got from winless New Orleans in the Pete Maravich trade. They also got Kauffman and playmaker guard Dean Meminger as part of that deal. In addition. they have New Orleans' No. 1 pick in the next draft, If the Jazz, the NBA's worst team, win a coin toss, Fitzsimmons could have his choice of N.C. State's David Thompson or a center, such as Morgan State's Marvin (the hu-

S. Africa Gets Davis Cup by India Default

ROME. Nov. 7 (AP) .- South Africa was awarded the 1974 Davis Cup today, but no disciplinary action was taken by the International Lawn Tennis Federation against India, which refused to play the final.

South Africa was also appointed as the eighth member of the ILTF Davis Cup Committee dur-ing an eight-hour session in a Rome hotel

"The cup was awarded to South Africa by India's refusal to play because of its opponent's apartheid policy," said Harccurt Woods of the United States, chairman of the Davis Cup Committee.

Woods also said that the format of the Davis Cup in the future will almost certainly be modified. Both the federations and the players agree on that," he said.

It was the first time in the history of the Davis Cup that the final was not played. South Africa was also the first country outside of the United States, Australia, Britain and France to win the competition.

Official Documents

"There was considérable discussion before we came up with a decision," Woods said. "Indian delegate Radge Khanna produced official documents, signed by responsible government members, to prove that his government prohibited the Indian players from facing South Africa,

"The committee was satisfied with the papers shown, and so was the South African delegate. so no disciplinary action has been taken against India. We obviously deplore such involvement of politics in sport."

Wood denied reports that both countries had asked the committes to expel the other from the Davis Cup.

"South Africa proposed to expel India, but the matter was withdrawn after the official documents were produced," Woods said. "There has been no such proposal from India."

Woods said the Davis Cup Committee had agreed to study the case and formulate a new regulation to be submitted to the ILTF congress in London next July to keep politics out of ten-

Woods said that, for 1975, South Africa had been included in the North American Davis Cup Zone and "no objection, from any country," has been made against the South Africans' participation in the event.

Economic Recipes

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON.—The economic history of the modern age begins with the crash of 1929 when stockbrokers jumped out of skyscrapers. The country learned its lesson, tore down the old skyscrapers and put up new ones with windows that couldn't be opened so that today stockbrokers have to be content with moving to smaller apartments. Economic progress was made on many other fronts. To make jobs, the government spent billions on roadbuilding and

Robert Moses, Baker using New York as a model, showed America how to turn every city into a traffic jam by abolishing trolley cars and putting in expressways. Unfortunately, however, people still did not trust bankers and so, by 1937, the economy was still in bad shape. This was because bankers had a bad image. They were high silk hats, cutaways and spats, and they kept their money in forbidding con-crete banks with iron bars on tiny windows and laughed contemptuously at people who of-tered them a plastic card in exchange for $500.

During the war the old generation of bankers was wiped out by the exertion of making so many low-interest loans to best the Axis, and by the late 1940s there was a new generation of bankers-

These bankers were ducktail haircuts and pegged trousers and set up shop in display windows and made people come in off the street to borrow money that didn't exist which could be repaid from salaries for work that hadn't yet been done.

This was called easy credit. It was a giant advance in economics, because it allowed people to buy things immediately with money they wouldn't earn until five years later, if ever.

Soon, industry everywhere was roaring away to make things people could buy immediately with all the money they hoped to earn after the things they bought had worn out. First it made two cars for every family. and then an electronic garagedoor opener, and then the outdoor barbecue grill.

When industry had finished making everything people wanted, people still had so much ready money left over from future salary that if started making things people didn't want and hired advertising agencies to make people want them anyhow. And so, economic progress gave us the hula hoop, the electric toothbrush and the moustache com:

Even these were not enough to soak up all the money that was expected to be made one of these days, and so, to keep the growth from stopping, every-body was urged to have bables, and we grew a bumper crop of brand new consumers.

Then one day, people who lived at the seashore noticed there were so many people coming to the beach that there was no place to lie down for a sunburn.
"This growth idea has gotten out of hand," said economists as they sat immobilized in $4,000 cars in traffic jams wondering how they could ever possibly earn the money to meet the installment payments on their sons new moustache combs, which were already wearing out on account of the planned obsolescence which kept the moustache-comb industry growing.

The upshot of this, and several other simultaneous events, was the discovery that growth destroying the economy. Soon there were hard times again, but all the new buildings had windows that couldn't be jumped out off. There was nothing to do but go on paying $2.50 a pound for lamb chops.

Once again, economic wisdom was expanded. The president announced that all the people who had indulged in growth were to blame for the hard times. Their selfish indulgence and waste would have to stop, he explained. That was the way to end hard times and bring back the good old days when everybody would once again be able to dine on 15-cent chipped-beef gravied on bread heels and happily put their shoulders to the wheel that would someday bring us grander expressways than we had ever known before. In brief, economics had revealed its ultimate secret: Good times are brought about by the genius of bankers, industrialists and leaders, while hard times are caused by our own stupidity in

A Think Tank Along the 2,718-Mile Congo

By Thomas A. Johnson

KINSHASA, Zaire (NYT).—Just 100 years after Henry Morton Stanley led an ill-starred expedition down the turbulent Congo River, an international group of scientists has set out to cover the full 2,718-mile length of the river, something that has never been done before.

In 1874, Stanley's party had traveled 2,118 miles of the river in 999 days but the exploratory voyage was carried out at a terrific cost. Of the 354 men who started out, only 115 ended the trip with Stanley.

Logs of the journey tell of 71 men dying of "fever," 58 from battle or murder" and 15 from drowning. Thirteen strayed from the main party and disappeared, eight died of starvation, one was killed by a crocodile and one was listed as having died The current expedition involves

Still, the dangers are plentiful. The other day the radio at the expedition's offices here crackled with the news that one of the eight rubber boats had been rammed by an angered hippopota-ed that the trip, which began on Oct. 9 near the Zambian border, will last four months. The projected cost is $360,000. In addition to charting the pedition is conducting scientific studies involving animal husbandry, wildlife conservation, botany, archaeology and anthropology. Experts from Australia, Britain, France, Finland, New Zealand, Nepal, the United States and Zaire are collaborating in the

Perhaps the most critical aspect of the mission is a projected study of river blindness, a disease transmitted by a fly-borne parasite that has according to United Nations estimates, destroyed the sight of some three million people in Africa south of the Sahara.

A team of 15 specialists, led by Fred Rodger, arrived here the other day to join the overall expedition as a task force studying river blindness. The team, which includes two women, will set up encampments in both the savannah and rain-forest regions of the river, where they will examine both the infected and the healthy. The team includes an enthmologist, a sociologist, a nutritionist, an immunologist and an ophthalmologist.

Mr. Rodger, who is from Britain said the results will be "run through our computers." He said that "never before have we been able to take such a think tank into the forests." "Hopefully," he added, "we can recommend some drug or vaccine as the result of our studies, and if that does not work, then we are back to square one with DDT and you know the side effects of that alternative." He referred to the ecological dislocations resulting from use of the pesticide. The river runs through Zaire and that country's army is lending logistical support to the effort. Many of the explorers involved in the actual navigation are members of the Scientific Exploration Society, an interna-tional body that has charted wild and remote rivers in many parts
